Abraham Lincoln

A Legacy in Numismatics

The stories really are true: Abraham Lincoln grew up on the American frontier, educated himself by reading borrowed books, and worked as a general-store clerk long before he became the 16th President of the United States. He was an accomplished speaker who was skilled at combining practical politics and moral principles. He established his place among America's greatest Presidents by leading the nation through one of the most trying times in its history – the American Civil War.

On Good Friday, April 14, 1865, Lincoln was assassinated at Ford's Theatre in Washington D.C. by John Wilkes Booth, an actor, who thought he was helping the cause of the South. The opposite was the result, for with Lincoln's death, the possibility of peace with magnanimity died. This was the first presidential assassination in U.S. history and made Lincoln a martyr for the ideal of national unity and the equality of man.

Abraham Lincoln has become one of the most recognizable American figures in the world. His portrait has replaced George Washington's as the most commonly seen Presidential image used across the country as a symbol of freedom, strength and justice. His name has been used for cities, businesses, schools and cars. Numismatically, he has appeared on medals, paper currency and commemorative coins of all types worldwide, making him one of the most popular American Presidents ever in terms of name and portrait recognition.
